Foreword

It is a great honour to introduce 'Connecting Communities' - the Cork City Integration Strategy (CCIS) 2008-2011. It is timely in the context of this, the European Union Year of Intercultural Dialogue. The strategy sets out to positively challenge discrimination and promote an inclusive, intercultural city in which all are valued, regardless of nationality, religion or ethnic background. It sets an agenda for cultural and ethnic diversity, to be welcomed and celebrated in the city.

In addition to individual efforts to embrace the changing face of Cork, the importance of commitment from local employers, trade unions, community and voluntary groups and state and semi state agencies, cannot be understated. As part of this strategy's implementation, agencies and groups have put themselves forward as participants in realizing this vision of an intercultural Cork city.

I would like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation and gratitude to those agencies and groups and to all who participated in the research processes undertaken to inform the strategy.

Lord Mayor of Cork, Councillor Donal Coughlan

14 April 2008

1 Introduction

As part of Ireland's National Action Plan Against Racism (NPAR) 2005-2008, and in keeping with the Cork City Development Board's Integrated Strategy – Imagine Our Future (2002-2012), an Integration Strategy has been prepared for the city, which seeks to welcome diversity, promote an intercultural society and break down some of the barriers to integration between communities in Cork city.

This section of the document introduces the Cork City Integration Strategy (CCIS) 2008-2011 and highlights its purpose, process, scope and underpinning values.

Section two outlines important terms in the context of an Integration Strategy and looks at a cultural and ethnic profile of Cork city.

The qualitative, quantitative and documentary research processes undertaken to inform the strategy are documented in section three.

Section four presents the findings from this research and highlights some of the barriers to integration in Cork city, ranging from issues of racism and discrimination to economic, social, cultural and political barriers. These barriers influenced the forming of the CCIS Thematic Summary and Action Plan (Section 4).

The strategy is located in a national and international legislative and policy context, as outlined in Appendix D.

1.1 CONTEXT AND RATIONALE

The National Action Plan Against Racism (NPAR) 2005-2008 fulfills a commitment by the Irish Government to the UN World Conference Against Racism and represents an approach to combat racism and discrimination by creating a more inclusive society, where equality for all prevails. NPAR identified a range of actions to realise its objectives. One of these actions called on Irish cities and counties to develop Anti-Racism and Diversity Plans.⁴ It is now envisaged that the work of the Anti-Racism and Diversity Plans will be continued under the guise of city and county integration strategies.

The Cork City Integration Strategy (CCIS) 2008-2011 is a response to this initiative.

Through recent funding from Pobal to area-based partnerships via the Office of the Minister of State with special responsibility for Integration for initiatives to support the integration of legally-resident immigrants, the Cork Intercultural Project was initiated.

The Steering Group for this project (Appendix H) recognised the need for a strategy to embrace the new and existing cultural and ethnic diversity in the city and contribute to the creation of a dynamic and socially cohesive Cork city.

Promoting participation was recognised as paramount to the development of such a strategy and thus the inclusion of ethnic minority representatives and support organizations was vital in forming the CCIS Advisory Group (Appendix G).

Migration

*"Migration is the mother of progress and invention."*¹

PETER SUTHERLAND (UN REPRESENTATIVE)

Ireland has moved from being a country of net emigration to one of net immigration.

"Between the 1840s and mid-1990s Ireland was a country of net emigration. Irish people... fled for political reasons... as a punishment for crime they were exiled... in the C17th to C19th and to provide labour in new colonies... they fled hunger and disease during the years of the Great Hunger and Famines of the late C19th, they enlisted as soldiers to fight foreign wars... they ventured as Roman Catholic missionaries... they left for intercultural experience and adventure, as artists and travellers, they emigrated as economic migrants from the 1930s to 1980s, they travelled as entrepreneurs seeking business opportunities & new markets".²

DUKES (2005) THE IRISH ABROAD

Immigration is a feature of Irish society which is here to stay. This change poses new opportunities and challenges for all.

Ireland's population currently stands at approximately 4.24 million people. Of this figure 14.7 percent comprise of people born outside Ireland. It has been estimated that by 2030 this number may exceed one million.³

The cultural, ethnic and religious diversity this brings to our shores adds to the diversity that has always existed in Ireland. The Jewish community in Ireland dates back to the 19th century. The Muslim community dates to the 1950s.

One of the longest standing minority ethnic groups is the indigenous Irish Traveller community, of which there are estimated to be 22,000³. It has also been estimated that 20,000 Orthodox Christians and 32,000 Muslims currently reside in Ireland.³

These are just some of the groups that are contributing to, and are an integral part of, Irish society. Almost 6,000 people from around the world are helping to educate a new generation of students in Ireland. Almost 20,000 people from all over the world work in the Irish health services and approximately 30,000 people of various nationalities and ethnicities work in the restaurants and hotels of Ireland.⁴

Cork has also witnessed a considerable growth in diversity in recent times, with the population of foreign nationals in the city doubling in the four years between 2002 and 2006.³ The rationale for this strategy is set in the context of what this change means for Cork city in acknowledging new and existing diversity.

As integration represents one of the most important challenges to modern Irish society, the strategy aims to set out a three-year plan for Cork city which tackles racism, discrimination and social exclusion, acknowledges that our society is being enriched by the presence and the contribution of people from different cultural, national and ethnic backgrounds, promotes their economic, social, cultural and political inclusion and ultimately strengthens the city's strategic focus on integration of its communities.

1.2 STRATEGY PROCESS

In August 2007, the CCIS Advisory Group agreed upon a process to develop the Cork City Integration Strategy 2008-2011. Initial endorsement of the process was obtained from the Cork City Development Board on the 21st September 2007.

Qualitative, quantitative and documentary research was undertaken to inform the strategy, by way of consultations with ethnic minorities and the wider Irish public and questionnaires (to enhance understanding of the barriers to integration), service provision audits (to establish challenges facing service providers) and documentary research (to supplement research findings).

The results from the above were then summarised and presented at three NPAR -themed round-table discussions. Participants at these meetings were asked to address the issues arising from the research presented and to suggest possible actions which would assist in welcoming diversity, countering racism, promoting interculturalism and breaking down some of the barriers to integration in Cork city.

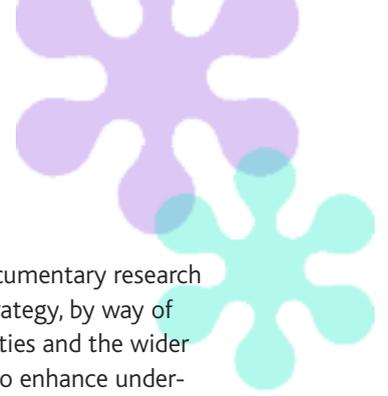

The findings from these processes enabled members of the Advisory Group to draw up a list of actions which responded to the needs articulated by various stakeholders. The actions identified in the strategy are framed in terms of what is realistic and achievable, given the resources available for the strategy's implementation, and are developed under the themes of the NPAR framework (Section 3.6).

The Strategy builds on the valuable work ongoing in the city by ethnic minority and immigrant support organizations and groups and on previous local research carried out.

1.3 STRATEGY SCOPE

The Strategy strives to take into account the diversity of situations within minority ethnic communities arising from the different legal status of asylum seekers, refugees, persons with stamp 4 - leave to remain, unaccompanied asylum-seeking minors, EU and EEA migrant workers, work permit and visa holders, undocumented migrant workers, international students and also the issues arising for members of the indigenous Irish Traveller Community.

The Strategy recognises that while the immigrant population has many common experiences, ethnic minority groups are differentiated both within and between themselves and have specific histories, cultures and languages. They are also differentiated along variables of gender, class, religion, education, and legal status, as outlined above.⁵

The Central Statistics Office (CSO) estimates 413,223 people resident in the state are 'non-Irish national'.³ The majority of these are from the EU: 27% from the UK and 39% from other EU member states. 15% of the total non-Irish population is Polish, 6% is Lithuanian and 3% Latvian. Outside of the EU, 3% of the total non-Irish population is Chinese, and 11% is from Asia (India 2%, Philippines 2%). Various African nationalities make up 8% of the non-Irish population.³

The CCIS Advisory Group agreed the target group for the strategy would include the approximately 20,000 people recognised as 'non-Irish national' in Cork city and the 720 Irish Travellers recorded as residing in the city on the night of the census 2006.³

The Cork City Integration Strategy (CCIS) actions only address issues and difficulties that come within the remit and resources of the city. This is not to ignore that accepting and embracing diversity requires changes to national immigration and integration policy and legislation. Many of these issues, which affect the lives of immigrants and ethnic minorities and act as serious barriers to integration were highlighted in the CCIS consultations and include family reunification, the habitual residency clause, exploitation and employment issues, the right to work for asylum seekers and access to education. Other serious concerns raised in focus groups which also have the potential to significantly delay the integration process centered on the lack of clarity regarding residency, naturalization and citizenship processes (See MIPEX)⁶. As mentioned the strategy is framed in terms of what is realistic and achievable. National issues, which have huge potential to affect a person's ability to integrate, are outside the framework of this strategy.

As integration takes place at the level of neighbourhoods, workplaces and schools, and as it depends on the willingness and capacity of public and private institutions to respond to needs of ethnic minorities, the strategy aimed to incorporate and build support across a wide range of sectors including community, voluntary, sports, arts, media, tourist, faith-based, and migrant organisations, state services, employers, trade unions, local politicians, academics and members of the general public.

1.4 STRATEGY VALUES

The following values underpin the strategy and are seen by the Advisory Group as necessary for its successful development and implementation.

Equality: of opportunity and outcome.

Participation: in the process by those affected by the outcomes.

Recognition and Respect for Diversity: Mutual respect for individual differences and diverse ways of working and the adoption of intercultural approaches.

The Cork City Integration Strategy research highlights the need to challenge traditionally held beliefs, stereotypes and prejudices, develop anti-racist practice and work pro-actively to build an intercultural society.

The promotion of fundamental rights, non-discrimination, empowerment and equal opportunities are seen as paramount to the strategy.

2 Diversity & Discrimination, Interculturalism & Integration

2.1 IMPORTANT TERMS

Some important terms to acknowledge in the context of the strategy:

Ethnicity includes shared characteristics such as culture, language, religion and traditions which contribute to a person's identity.⁷

Assimilation was an unsuccessful policy aiming to absorb minority ethnic groups into the majority community, with an expectation that communities and their cultures would become invisible or expire. Attempts were made in the past in Ireland, in relation to the Traveller community. Assimilation has been discredited and replaced by concepts of multiculturalism and interculturalism.⁸

Multiculturalism refers to different ethnic, racial, religious or cultural groups existing in the same society, but distinct from each other.⁷

Interculturalism is about creating the conditions for interaction, understanding and respect between cultures and ethnicities, and equality of opportunity.⁷

Discrimination relates to unfair treatment of a person or group based on prejudice relating to any of the nine grounds set out in the legislation.⁷

*"Racism is a particular form of exclusion faced by minority ethnic groups, based on the false belief that some 'races' are inherently superior to others, because of their skin colour, nationality, ethnic or cultural background. Racism denies people their basic human rights, dignity and respect. It... ranges from small, everyday acts of discrimination... to acts of threatening behaviour and violence."*⁸

Racism and Social Exclusion

According to Partnership 2000 and the National Development Plan 2000-2006, social exclusion is defined as the 'marginalisation from production (unemployment), from consumption (poverty), from social networks (community, family, neighbours) from decision-making and from an adequate quality of life'.⁸ For minority ethnic groups, experiences of racism often accumulate and result in marginalisation.

Where a minority group experiences racism over generations the risk of social exclusion is particularly high.⁸ Those who feel excluded from society, instead of striving to belong, may seek to isolate themselves in their own communities.⁹

Integration

There are many different views and ongoing debates about what constitutes integration. Integration is 'the combination of diverse elements'. In relation to societies, one looks at how diverse societies are combined or what an integrated society looks like.

Integration, as outlined earlier, can take various forms, such as assimilation (monoculturalism) or multiculturalism, which have proven unsuccessful. Interculturalism however has gained a more dominant position in discussions and focuses on actual interaction, understanding and respect between majority and minority cultures.

Research literature on the subject recognises integration as a process, which is multi-dimensional, extends over several generations and is bi-directional, in that it affects equally the majority population. The term 'integration' is widely used in a policy context at national and European level, understood to be 'a two way process that places duties and obligations on cultural and ethnic minorities and the State to create a more inclusive society'.⁴

For the purposes of a National Economic and Social Council (NESC) 2006 report, integration is defined as the adjustments that result from interactions between immigrants and mainstream Irish society.¹⁰

The manner in which the integration process is conducted is as important as its results and should be seen as undergoing constant change as society evolves.¹¹ The process is shaped by many factors such as the skills, abilities, religion and other characteristics of the ethnic minority population and the economic, social, cultural and political characteristics of society. The emphasis of integration policy should be on supporting initiatives which enable the preservation of the ethnic, cultural and religious identity of the individual, remove the barriers affecting access to mainstream services and raise-awareness among all cultural groups.¹¹

For these reasons the Cork City Integration Strategy recognises integration as:

An intercultural process which places rights and obligations, on the state, majority and minority communities, to ensure all individuals have the opportunity to participate in economic, social, cultural and political life, on an equal basis and without having to relinquish one's cultural identity.

It has been argued that minorities inevitably integrate into society over time¹². However, national and local policies and practices can greatly speed up or slow down the integration process. It is envisaged that this strategy will represent a first step in establishing a clear strategic vision for integration in Cork city.

2.2 DEMOGRAPHY OF CORK CITY

The normal residence figure for Cork city is 181,746. This figure includes a number of suburbs added to the approximately 120,000 people residing in Cork City Electoral Divisions (EDs).³

Research shows that immigrants are more likely to settle in urban areas. Further, within cities, they are likely to become concentrated in particular neighbourhoods by following existing family or community ties or to minimise living costs. An analysis of recorded populations in Electoral Divisions from the 2006 Census shows the average percentage of the population stating a place of birth as outside Ireland, at almost 15% nationally. Some Electoral Divisions in Cork city recorded over 25% of its population stating their place of birth as outside Ireland.³

The CCIS target group includes the approximately 20,000 people recognised as 'non-Irish national' in Cork city and the 720 Irish Travellers recorded as residing in the city on the night of the census 2006.³

It is important to note that there has been acknowledgment of some under-enumeration in the 2006 census.

3 CCIS Research

Research has been on-going over the past eight months to inform the Cork City Integration Strategy, by way of focus group consultations, service mapping audits, questionnaires and round table discussions. Documentary research was also carried out to supplement findings.

3.1 SERVICE MAPPING AUDITS

In order to inform the strategy, fifty service mapping audits were distributed to statutory and voluntary service providers in Cork city, of which 80% were returned. The service mapping exercise attempted to establish the level of engagement by the target group, challenges faced by organisations in providing services to the target group and factors hindering the target group from accessing services. Service mapping audits also called for suggestions on the development of services to better facilitate the target group and important actions for inclusion in the Cork City Integration Strategy.

3.2 CONSULTATIONS – FOCUS GROUPS (FGs)

Approximately seventy-five people were consulted in ethnic minority focus groups including representatives from the following communities:

- 1 Polish Community
- 2 Lithuanian Community
- 3 Czech Republic Community
- 4 Filipino Community
- 5 Indian Community
- 6 Cork Muslim Women's Group
- 7 Cork Traveller Women's Network
- 8 Mahon Traveller Men's Group
- 9 Discussions with Asylum Seekers
- 10 Cork Networking Committee
- 11 General ethnic minority focus group (inc. representatives from Hungary, Iraq, Zimbabwe, Cameroon, Nigeria & Somalia)

3.2.1 Public Consultations

Calls for Public Submissions on integration issues were advertised in local papers and three 'public consultation' meetings were held in an effort to gauge the 'general Irish public' opinion on integration. All three meetings were poorly attended. This may be due to, as noted in Advisory Group discussions, Irish-born people seeing integration as something ethnic minorities must carry out, rather than the two-way process between majority and minority cultures.

3.3 QUESTIONNAIRE RESEARCH

One hundred questionnaires were drawn up and distributed in the Cork city area. (This included 50 ethnic minority questionnaires and 50 general Irish public questionnaires). Population sampling was constructed, using Census 2006 data, based on sex, age, ethnicity and nationality. The surveys were taken on three separate days, at three separate locations, across the city. Respondents were approached until quotas for each grouping were filled.

British and Polish migrants were two of the most significant groups represented in ethnic minority surveys. Others included Czech, Spanish, Pakistani, Chinese, Nigerian and Chechen migrants and Irish Travellers. Twenty-eight males and 22 females were surveyed. The majority were aged between 18-34 years. Of these, 60% were either married or in a long term relationship and 34% had children in Ireland. Many of the ethnic minority questionnaire participants had been in Ireland for less than one year.

3.4 DOCUMENTARY RESEARCH

A body of research exists in Cork which has addressed the needs of migrants and explored integration issues. The strategy builds on this and other research.^{19/20/21}

3.5 ROUND TABLE DISCUSSIONS (RTDs)

The issues arising from the service mapping, consultation and questionnaire research carried out were summarised and presented at three themed round table discussions. Participants at these meetings (Appendix A) were asked to discuss the findings and, taking the concerns of all stakeholders into account, to suggest actions which could be carried out over the next three years to enable the conditions for integration to be realised in the city.

Each of the key themes constitutes a section within the action plan, and is linked with one of the five objectives of the NPAR Framework. (See section 4.6)

RTD 1 – focused on ethnic and cultural diversity in the service provision areas of education, health, social services, childcare, accommodation, information provision and in the administration of justice. (NPAR Theme 3)

RTD 2 – was concerned with economic inclusion and protection against racism. (NPAR Themes 1 and 2)

RTD 3 – focused on awareness-raising of diversity through the media, the arts, sport and tourism and ethnic minority participation in society at political, policy and community levels. (NPAR Themes 4 and 5)

4 CCIS Summary and Action Plan

It is important to note that although this research primarily sought to establish the barriers to integration and ways of overcoming them, as outlined below, many ethnic minority research respondents had very positive experiences to report on life in Cork city.

4.1 PROTECTION & REDRESS AGAINST RACISM & THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

As anti-racism and anti-discrimination are the foundations of an effective integration strategy it is vital to firstly address these issues.

"I have lived in Cork for five years and am very settled here. My English is very good, but at times when I talk to Irish people, I see frustration and disgust in their eyes".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

The questionnaire research carried out to inform the strategy showed that two thirds of the 'general Irish public' believe racism is an issue in Cork city. More worryingly, 44% reported witnessing a racist incident. While the majority of these incidents were verbal in nature, some related to physical assault.

More than a quarter of ethnic minorities surveyed reported a member of their family had experienced racism in the city (see below).

All Travellers and migrants of African origin surveyed reported experiencing racism. Again, the nature of these incidents was for the most part verbal, occurring predominantly on the street. These results correspond with similar national research.¹³

What is of huge significance is the extremely low frequency for reporting such behaviour, with 77% of those who had a family member experience a racist incident in the city, not reporting it (see below).

Many of the focus group participants had experienced discrimination in some form, which they felt was due to their ethnic background. The following are some of the main topics noted in focus groups:

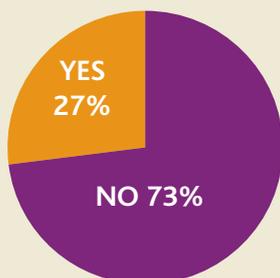

- Racism experienced from Irish youths
- Not knowing where to report racist incidents
- Worried about the outcome of reporting
- The need to hide one's identity
- Biased media coverage of Travellers
- Asylum Seekers' isolation and exclusion
- The experience of visible minorities.

Despite this, eighty-four percent of ethnic minority questionnaire respondents reported they 'feel welcome in Cork city' and when asked about their intentions to make Cork city their permanent home, fifty-seven percent reported they intend to do so.

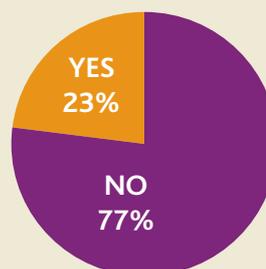

"Many immigrants are here to stay. They see their futures in Cork and are interested in learning more about Ireland".

4.2 ECONOMIC INCLUSION AND EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY

General Irish Public questionnaire respondents were asked if they believe ethnic minorities make economic contributions to the city. Although sixty-six percent believe economic contributions are being made, it remains that a third of respondents are either unsure or believe ethnic minorities do not contribute to economic growth. This is despite the Irish government actively seeking workers from abroad to fill labour-shortages in the economy.

"We came to work, not to dance".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

Despite the many challenges outlined overleaf, which ethnic minorities face in accessing good employment in the city, our questionnaire research showed that almost two thirds of the 'general Irish public' believe ethnic minorities have as good a chance or better chance than Irish-born people at obtaining employment.

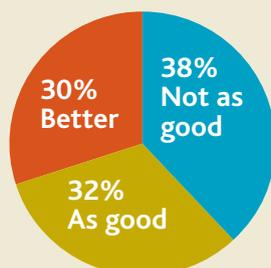

The chart below outlines the main issues ethnic minority respondents attributed to difficulties experienced in finding or carrying out work. Language difficulties were the most commonly cited problem. Of the respondents currently in employment only half felt their work was commensurate to their qualifications.

Many focus group participants reported experiencing discrimination in relation to accessing employment and also within the workplace which they felt is due to their ethnic background. This was of particular concern for the Traveller focus groups. Many focus group participants expressed a fear of living in poverty, even for those in employment.

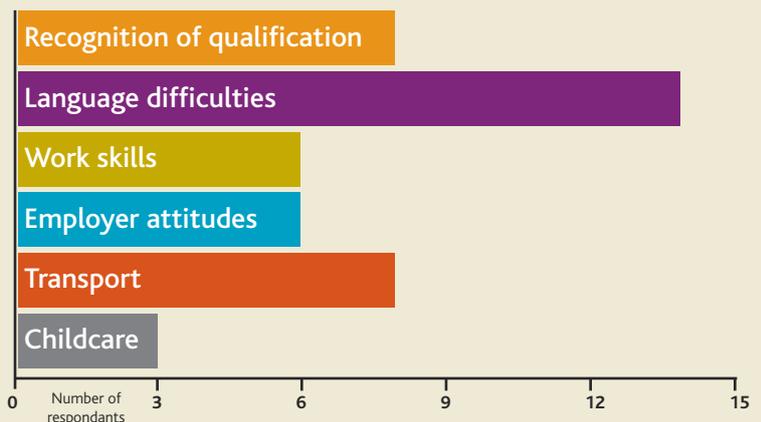

"We don't feel financially secure living here. We don't have a safety net, if something goes wrong we don't know our entitlements".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

How do you think ethnic minorities fare, in terms of their chances of obtaining good employment in Cork city, compared to Irish-born people?

Have any of the following presented challenges in finding/carrying out your work?

The main points noted by focus group participants as barriers to economic inclusion and ultimately integration in the city include:

Insufficient recognition of qualifications

Recognition of qualifications is a crucial first step into employment. The main concern raised by participants was the time it took to obtain this recognition from the National Qualifications Authority of Ireland (NQA).

"The waiting time is too lengthy".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

"When the National Qualifications Authority stamps your certificate; there is a clause stating they are not responsible for its authenticity – this undermines its status".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

Working in jobs for which over-qualified

Highly-skilled professionals working in low-skill labour, was noted by participants as a barrier to integration.

"I am a qualified engineer, but working as a cleaner. I want Cork city to use and benefit from my knowledge and skills".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

Employment permits / visas

The main concerns centred on problems obtaining work permits or visas and the length of time to issue these. Moreover, the insecurity of the work permit system was a huge issue for focus group participants.

"As a non-EU national, when my daughter reaches 18, she must pay huge fees if she wants to go to college, which I cannot afford on a nurse's salary. If she can't get a work permit, she must return home. All my family is here, who will she return home to?"

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

Confusion, on the part of employers, regarding the employability of spouses of work permit / visa holders was stated on many occasions as a huge frustration for some, as was the resulting mixed messages being sent out by employers. Lack of flexibility in changing jobs was also noted.

"Employers will sooner employ someone that doesn't need a work permit, due to the cost. Spouses don't need a permit in the UK".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

Exploitation / inequality

Some minority ethnic workers reported feeling exploited due to low pay and unfair conditions. Examples of this included being denied holiday or overtime pay, unequal divisions of labour and unfair working conditions.

"That holiday is only for Irish people".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

Particular areas of employment noted for such practices were in the construction and tourism sectors, in hospitals, nursing homes and agencies.

Many focus group participants stated they were fearful of losing their jobs if attempting to engage with trade unions.

The language barrier

The language barrier was acknowledged by focus group participants as allowing people to be exploited in the workplace and preventing possible integration.

"My husband (Lithuanian) works in construction with 200 Polish. Since coming to Ireland he has not had the time or opportunity to learn English, but is now fluent in Polish. He is too tired to go to English classes when he returns from work".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

Other general points raised in relation to economic inclusion focused on difficulties accessing work experience and lack of general progression routes, lack of access to information on rights and entitlements, constraints of the Habitual Residency Condition, a lack of facilities for Muslims in most workplaces and discrimination from other employees, were noted as barriers to integration for some participants.

"I am a Quantity Surveyor. To work here I have to get work experience in Ireland. I have proof I have worked in England, but this is not recognised by employers here. I can't get a grant to go back to school. I don't know what to do. My hands are tied".

4.3 SERVICE PROVISION

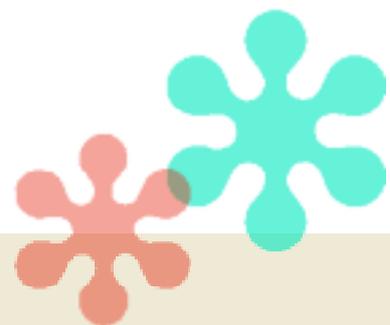

This NPAR theme relates to ensuring policies and services give due consideration to cultural and ethnic diversity. It focuses on Education, Health, Housing, Childcare, Social Services and Information Provision.

*“Service providers need to consider the extent they may need to vary the ways in which services are delivered... to take cultural differences into account. The aim should be to equality and diversity- proof services”.*¹⁴

Ethnic minority questionnaire respondents were asked to specify in which areas of service provision in Cork city they feel they are most likely to encounter problems due to their ethnicity. As discussed above, obtaining employment was highlighted as the greatest challenge attributed to ethnicity.

Other areas covered included access to health, education, accommodation and justice services in the city.

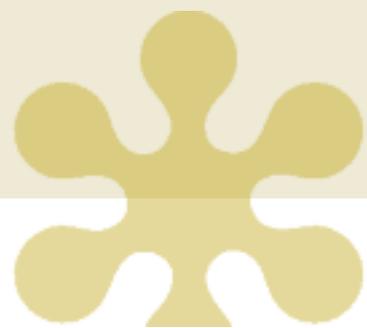

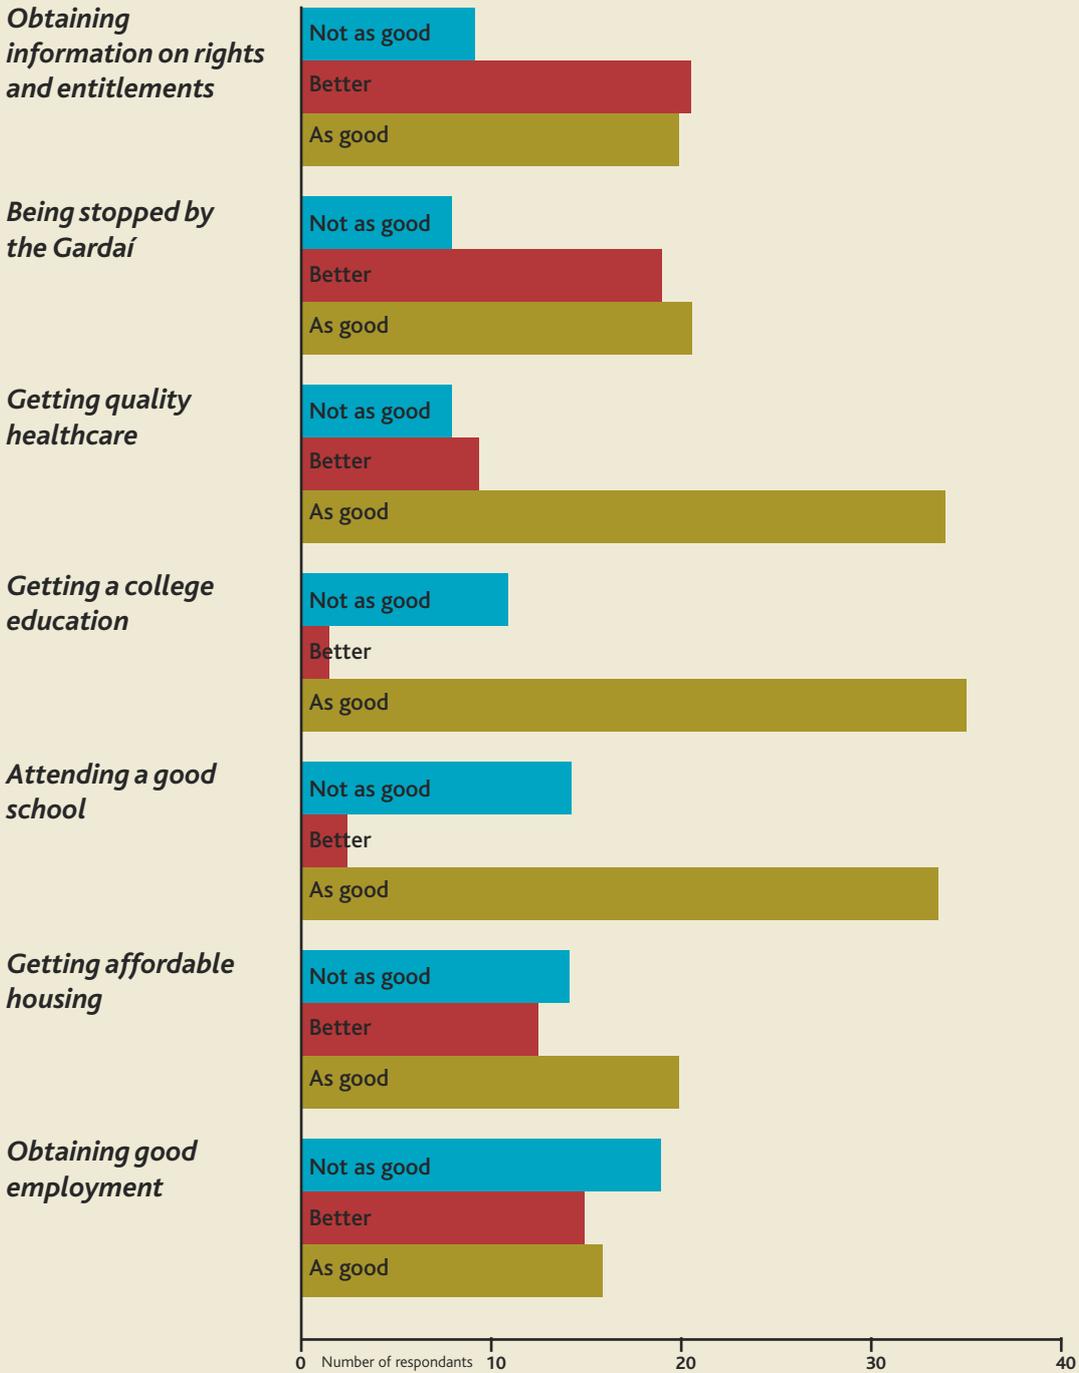

General Irish public questionnaire respondents were asked how they think ethnic minorities fare, regarding their chances of accessing certain services in Cork city. In relation to accessing schools, colleges and health-care, the vast majority believe ethnic minorities are on an equal footing to Irish-born people. In response to obtaining information about one’s rights and entitlements, forty-two percent believe ethnic minorities have a better chance of obtaining such information (see page 16).

Problems attributed to ethnicity

How do you think ethnic minorities fare in Cork city, compared to Irish-born people, in terms of their chances of the following:

In addition to questionnaire respondents, focus group participants were also asked about their satisfaction with the level of access to and quality of services provided in Cork city. Perceived discriminatory attitudes of some front line staff in state agencies and the general lack of appropriately trained staff dealing with intercultural matters were voiced by participants.

Challenges noted by some service providers include the lack of recognition from local and national politicians and parties and Department of Justice administrative delays and attitudes regarding family reunion, visas, EU Treaty rights and immigration.

4.3.1 Education

Many focus group participants spoke highly of mainstream education services in Cork. However, there was consensus on the need for more information on how the education system operates in Ireland and the need for more of a focus on cultural and ethnic diversity in the curriculum.

Traveller representative groups noted that while the number of Traveller children completing primary school has steadily increased, retention at post-primary level remains a serious issue. The perceived problem of some schools openly displaying low educational expectations of Traveller children was voiced as a concern, in this regard.

The Central Applications Office (CAO) application procedure, designed for resident nationals, and the resulting lack of a fast-track option into higher education for immigrants, was one of the factors noted by service providers as hindering the target group from accessing higher education. Other concerns centred on the financial obstacles to education. Some of the challenges faced by educational organisations in the city in providing services to the target group include difficulties in promoting educational programmes to the target group, in verifying previous levels of educational attainment and in ensuring the standard of English literacy is appropriate. Other organisations expressed difficulties in dealing with possibly different attitudes to educational processes and different levels of importance being put on education by some groups.

There was general agreement in focus groups on the need to learn the English language in order to integrate and enhanced evening or weekend provision of low-cost English language courses was requested.

Ethnic minority questionnaires carried out depicted that over half the respondents had experienced language difficulties since coming to Ireland. Yet only twenty-one percent of non-native speakers surveyed had attended English language classes since coming to Ireland.

4.3.2 Housing

Focus group consultations highlighted the difficulties in securing accommodation in Cork city. Perceived unfair treatment by landlords and letting agencies and the need to produce references when newly arrived, were some of the points raised.

Constraints imposed by the Habitual Residency Condition and Stamp 4 status requirements for housing eligibility were additional factors hindering the target group accessing accommodation.

Some of the challenges faced by housing organisations providing services to the target group include emergency shelters being full every night, landlords refusing single parents, non-Irish or those in receipt of rent supplements, in dealing with the consequences of the Habitual Residency Condition and in providing housing in suitable areas from a social integration perspective.

Inequality, in relation to Traveller housing issues, was also noted. Serious discrimination in the private rented sector and the shortage of Traveller accommodation in the city was stressed.

4.3.3 Justice

In addition to the issues outlined earlier under the heading of 'Protection Against Racism', a lack of information regarding driving laws and the regulation of foreign registered cars was noted by focus groups participants.

A factor hindering the target group from accessing the justice system, as noted by An Gardaí Siochana, was the possibility of negative experiences in countries of origin with police forces and thus immigrants being fearful or suspicious of becoming involved with figures of authority.

A challenge faced by the justice system in providing services was seen as the need to build trust and confidence between ethnic minorities and the Gardaí.

4.3.4 Health

The cost of health care in Ireland was the main concern for focus group participants. Also noted were the waiting times in Accident & Emergency departments or for specialist treatments.

Some focus group participants reported flying home to their country of origin to receive medical attention because of the reduced cost and waiting time. The language barrier was again raised as problematic in accessing health services. The lack of information on the availability of Halal food in hospitals and clarity regarding entitlements of patients to request female doctors was also noted by some participants.

The lack of information on how the health system works and eligibility for such services was identified in service provision audits as hindering immigrants from accessing health services in Cork city.

The difficulties in customising generic services to address the needs of different groups and the perceived lack of cultural support for group work or counselling were also named as challenges facing the health system in providing services to the target group (see also HSE Intercultural Strategy).¹⁵

Traveller representative groups noted good access to health care, but outlined the need for more support around mental health issues. They stressed the negative effects of poor access to accommodation, education and employment opportunities, on Traveller mental health and the importance of agencies working in partnership to address these issues.

4.3.5 Childcare

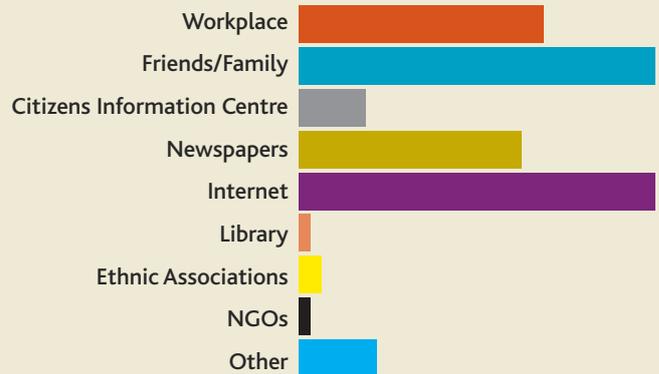

The main concerns stressed by focus group participants centred on the lack of awareness regarding the availability of community crèches and low cost childcare services in the city, the need for culturally appropriate materials in crèches and pre-schools and the heavy costs incurred for private childcare. Traveller focus groups commended recent efforts by community crèches to be more inclusive of Traveller children and in providing culturally appropriate materials. The main challenge faced by childcare organisations in providing services to the target group was the lack of affordable childcare places available in the city.

4.3.6 Information Provision

Focus group participants reported being unsure of where to access information and being uncertain of their rights and entitlements, due to the many myths and misinformation being circulated. This sentiment was echoed in ethnic minority questionnaires which suggested that those who experienced least difficulties in accessing such information were of English-speaking or Polish origin. Two focus group participants had sent documents to their country of origin to have them translated.

Ethnic minority questionnaire respondents were also questioned regarding where they access general information. Friends and family, the workplace, internet and newspapers were reported as being the most common sources of information for the target group.

Places used to access information

General Service Provision

In addition to the various obstacles outlined above which impede access to and satisfactory outcomes from service provision in the city, other general factors as noted by service mapping audits, included waiting lists, financial obstacles, insecurity of residency, mental health issues, lack of permanent addresses, intimidating application procedures and uncertainty regarding the agendas of organisations.

Also noted was the possibility of ethnic minorities having little or no time to engage in capacity building projects due to other more pressing commitments. More public awareness of the difficulties and challenges ethnic minority groups experience when coming to live in Cork city was highlighted as necessary.

4.4 RECOGNITION OF DIVERSITY, PARTICIPATION IN SOCIETY AND INTEGRATION

4.4.1 Recognition of Diversity

"We need to demonstrate to Cork city positive aspects of our culture and traditions. We want the city to get to know and trust us".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

Questionnaire respondents of the 'general Irish public' were asked if they believe ethnic minorities make cultural contributions to the city. Approximately two thirds believe ethnic minorities do so.

When ethnic minorities participants were asked, if they felt free to practice their culture, customs and religion in Cork city, encouragingly, ninety-three percent of respondents felt free to do so.

Ethnic minorities were asked if they felt they were represented fairly in the media. Only a fifth of those surveyed felt that media representation was fair.

Fair and accurate representation in the media was also discussed in focus groups. The sentiments of the participants echoed those of the questionnaire respondents. Feelings of embarrassment in connection with some newspaper headlines, were expressed. The importance of media portrayal in constructing and reinforcing prejudices was stressed by participants. The growth of media outlets in the city catering for immigrants was noted and welcomed.

Some focus group participants felt that promoting interaction, through sport and recreational activities was an excellent opportunity to enable integration. Focus group participants voiced concerns regarding how well they would be received by sports clubs or organisations.

Other focus group participants voiced the need for artistic opportunities to express experiences and talents and the promotion of ethnic minority art in public places to celebrate the diverse range of cultural expression and heritage. However, few participants had engaged in arts activities in the city.

"We need the help of the authorities to provide opportunities for us to express, save and improve our national identity".

(FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT)

4.4.2 Participation in Society

"I feel more of an onlooker, than a participant in society".

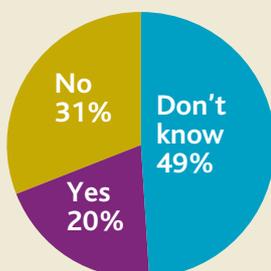

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

Political Level Participation

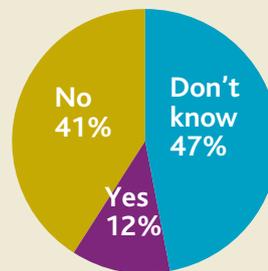

The importance of enhanced participation in political processes was noted by focus group participants. None of the immigrant focus groups had experience of voting in local elections. The need for greater voter registration and participation was voiced and a high level of interest in political issues was evident. But a lack of information on this was expressed as a barrier to participation at this level.

When ethnic minority questionnaire respondents were questioned regarding political issues – sixty percent indicated they were unfamiliar with the Irish political system. Only twelve percent felt their interests were represented politically.

Do you feel ethnic minority groups are represented fairly in the media?

Do you feel your interests are represented politically?

Community Level Participation

Focus group participants reported uncertainty regarding where community projects operate from or what type of service they offer. Having little or no time to engage in community-based initiatives or projects due to more pressing demands, was also noted by participants. Service provider audits noted uncertainty regarding how best to attract the target group to projects in the community. They outlined a keen interest in and awareness of the importance of engaging with new communities and groups and highlighted the importance of ensuring ethnic minority inclusion and representation in local development projects and the need for equal access to support programmes, grants and funding.

4.4.3 – Integration

"You have to be here five years, before you can apply for residency. Then there is a huge waiting time. You will be here seven years, before you can think about integration".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

Barriers to Integration - In addition to the factors outlined above and those outside the remit of this strategy, other barriers to integration mentioned by focus groups participants include the lack of opportunities for people to meet (it was indicated that some Irish social activities are alcohol focused, thus discouraging participation of some migrant groups). Forms of indirect segregation were also mentioned by some participants.

"I was involved in a soccer team - after matches the manager spoke to Irish players as a group and the immigrant players as a group; instead of all of us, as a team. No one phoned to ask why I left the team".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

General Irish public respondents were asked about their frequency of social contact with people of ethnic minority backgrounds. Sixty per cent responded either 'frequently or sometimes' having contact, while forty percent answered 'rarely or never' having contact.

"I feel integrated sometimes, especially at work, but on the street I feel like a stranger".

FOCUS GROUP PARTICIPANT

Opinions were sought on the state of relations between Irish-born people and members of ethnic minority groups. Eighty-six percent of the general Irish public and eighty percent of ethnic minorities surveyed indicated that such relations were an issue that needed to be addressed.

When the general Irish public were asked who had responsibility for integration, surprisingly, respondents most frequently indicated the wider Irish community, followed closely by the state, and only then minority ethnic communities.

The final chart relates to how integrated ethnic minority participants feel. Taking the fluidity of the term 'integration' into account, the results are quite positive. Almost half of the questionnaire respondents reported feeling partially integrated into life in Cork city. Almost 30% of respondents felt fully integrated.

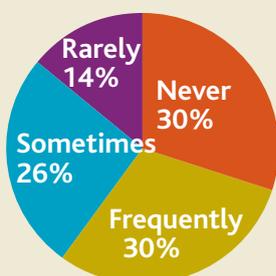

Some focus group participants had taken part in recent Intercultural Dialogue courses and felt they provided a simple opportunity to build relationships with people of different nationalities and ethnicities, explore meanings of culture and cultural differences and share experiences.

In the final section of all surveys participants were asked for general comments and suggestions on improving the conditions for integration in Cork city.

The need for increased provision of English language classes, intercultural activities and the overall inclusion of ethnic minorities in a variety of social, cultural and sporting activities were cited. Enhanced information provision for ethnic minorities and to increase awareness of diversity among the general Irish public was cited on several occasions in focus group, service mapping and questionnaire research, as vital to successful integration.

The results in the chart on facing page relate to the levels of awareness among the general Irish public, on the rights and entitlements of different migrant groups in the city. The results indicate quite low levels of awareness of rights and entitlements, across the three groups. Many were unsure of meanings of the terms refugee or asylum seeker.

4.5 IMPLEMENTATION AND MONITORING OF CORK CITY INTEGRATION STRATEGY

The Advisory Group established for the preparation and development of the Cork City Integration Strategy (CCIS) 2008-2011 will form the CCIS Implementation Group and monitor progress of the strategy, by requesting updates and progress reports on a bi-annual basis from lead agencies, on actions for which they are responsible.

The necessary progress indicators and targets on how actions will be measured will be drawn up at the first meeting of the CCIS Implementation Group, and an implementation strategy will be developed. The group will ensure these reports are submitted to the Cork City Development Board over the life-time of the strategy.

It is anticipated that as the strategy is being implemented, additional initiatives or actions which take cognizance of the changing social fabric of the city, will be welcomed and included in the strategy (see Declaration of Commitment - Appendix I).

Legislative and Policy Context

The Legal, Policy and Institutional Context at National Level – Irish legislation relating to racism has developed within the framework of EU and international conventions and policies. The three main legal provisions for dealing with racism in Irish law are outlined below.

Incitement to Hatred Act 1989 is the only piece of Irish legislation solely devoted to the prohibition of hate crimes. The Act was placed under review in 2000 as no convictions were made under it. Calls have been made to reinvigorate the Act in order to tackle racism. However, the Department of Justice, Equality and Law Reform in its First Report to the Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (CERD) stated that 'The growing body of case law under the Act suggests application of legislation is adapting to the growing problem'.

Employment Equality Acts of 1998 and 2004 deal with discrimination in employment, related to any of nine grounds: gender, marital status, family status, age, race (including skin colour, ethnicity, nationality), religion, disability, sexual orientation, or membership of the Traveller community. Employment issues dealt with by the Acts include: dismissal, equal pay, working conditions, harassment, promotion and access to employment.

Equal Status Acts 2000 and 2004 deal with discrimination in the provision of goods and services, related to any of nine grounds mentioned earlier. The Acts apply to people who: buy and sell goods, use or provide services, obtain or dispose of accommodation, attend at or are in charge of educational establishments.

Employment Permits Bill – The Minister for Enterprise, Trade and Employment recently published a second Employment Permits Bill which will govern the issue of all employment permits for nationals from outside the EEA and will put aspects of the administrative arrangements for employment permits on a legislative basis.

Immigration, Residency and Protection Bill 2008 proposes a number of changes to Ireland's immigration and protection systems.

INSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENTS:

The Department of Justice, Equality and Law

Reform – Equal Status Division is responsible for promoting the development of a more equal society by developing the policy and legal framework to advance equal opportunities, particularly in the area of access to goods, facilities and services.

The Equality Authority – is an independent, specialist equality body to combat discrimination and to promote equality under the equality legislation. It was established in 1998 under the Employment Equality Act.

The Equality Tribunal – was also established under the Employment Equality Act, to adjudicate or mediate cases under the equality legislation. It is an independent, quasi-judicial body. It decides on complaints of alleged discrimination under both pieces of equality legislation. Its decisions and mediated settlements are legally binding.

The National Consultative Committee on Racism and Interculturalism (NCCRI) is an independent expert body, founded in 1998. Its role is to inform policy development and seek to build consensus through dialogue in relation to the issues of racism and interculturalism.

The Irish Human Rights Commission (IHRC) was established in 2000 as a result of the Good Friday Agreement, to ensure that the human rights of all people in the state are fully realised and protected, in law, in policy and in practice.

The Irish Naturalisation and Immigration Service (INIS) was established in 2005 'to provide a one-stop-shop approach to migrants'. It incorporates the Dept. of Justice, Equality and Law Reform structures that previously dealt with asylum, immigration and citizenship and the Visa Section of the Department of Foreign Affairs. There is a new Immigrant Unit established within the service.

Office of the Refugee Applications Commissioner (ORAC) is the first-instance decision making body in the Irish asylum system. It was established under the Refugee Act, 1996. Under the Act, the Commissioner is required to investigate each asylum application and applications by refugees to allow family members to enter and reside in the State.

Reception and Integration Agency (RIA) is responsible for coordinating the provision of services to asylum seekers and refugees, coordinating the implementation of integration policy for all refugees and persons granted leave to remain and responding to crisis situations.

Office of the Minister for Integration

Last year, a new Office for Integration was established under the auspices of Conor Lenihan TD, Minister for State, with special responsibility for Integration. The office incorporates the main functions of the Reception and Integration Agency and is also the lead government agency for the implementation of the National Action Plan against Racism. The Office also has responsibility for development and implementation of the Government's integration strategy.

Social Inclusion – The National Anti Poverty Strategy includes a specific commitment to tackling racism, racial discrimination and related intolerance. It identifies Travellers, migrants and minority ethnic groups as being vulnerable to poverty and social exclusion.

6.2 – The Legal, Policy and Institutional Context at International Level

The International Labour Organisation (ILO)

Convention 111: Discrimination in Respect of Employment and Occupation (1958) was ratified by Ireland in 1999. This convention deals mainly with discrimination in employment and vocational training. Ireland is obliged to indicate in its annual report the actions taken to comply with the policy and the outcomes of these actions.

International Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Racial Discrimination (CERD)

1969, is widely recognised as the principal international instrument in relation to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. Ireland ratified it when the Equal Status Act 2000 became law. Ireland is obliged to submit a comprehensive report every two years to the CERD Committee.

The Declaration and Programme of Action arising from the World Conference Against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance 2001 (WCAR) is international recognition of the multidimensional nature of racism and the need for a united and committed response at global, regional and national levels.

The Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (UNHCHR) has responsibility for implementing the outcomes of the WCAR.

EU framework to combat discrimination

Common minimum standards for legal protection against discrimination have come into force in all 27 EU Member States. The Race Directive prohibits discrimination in access to and supply of goods and services. The Race Directive, adopted at EU level in 2000, lays down the framework for combating discrimination on the grounds of racial or ethnic origin, with a view to putting into effect in the Member States the principle of equal treatment. In Ireland, the Equality Act 2004 put into effect, the provisions of this and other EU directives.

EU policy on integration

The European Commission's Communication (2003) 336 final focuses on developing a holistic approach to the integration of 'third country nationals'. A broad set of 'integration principles' have been agreed between Member States, which will form a basis for building integration policy in Member States over the coming years.

In November 2005, the European Council adopted a programme for 2005-2009 on strengthening the EU as an area of freedom, security and justice. One of the ten priorities of the Hague Programme focuses on 'integration and maximising the positive impact of migration'.

EU policy is reinforced through the establishment of the European Refugee Fund (ERF). The ERF is to support and encourage efforts made by EU Member States in receiving refugees and displaced persons.

A framework and funding programme for pilot projects concerning the integration of third country nationals (INTI), was also adopted by the European Commission in June 2003. The aim of the INTI programme is to promote dialogue within civil society, develop integration models, evaluate best practices in the integration field and set up networks at European level.

The European Monitoring Centre on Racism and Xenophobia (EUMC) provides an analysis of racism across EU Member States, particularly through its RAXEN network (eumc.eu.int). The European Commission on Racism and Intolerance (ECRI) – provides periodic country-by-country reports.
